Sept/Oct 2022	Aug. 1, 2022	Professional Advocacy The importance of advocating for our profession has never been clearer than during this global pandemic, with its particular impact on medical laboratory professionals. This issue will showcase the ways our Labvocates work to improve the environment for laboratory professionals and maximize their efforts on positive patient outcomes. Advocacy topics may include efforts to influence public policy that impact laboratory professionals, including pressing for high standards, state licensure, and stronger rules on certification. Articles may also focus on personal advocacy—how to shape public perceptions of laboratory professionals and their contributions to the healthcare system—and ASCLS programs, such as the annual Laboratory Legislative Symposium, advocacy work in specific constituent societies, and engagement with regulatory agencies.
Nov/Dec 2022	Oct. 1, 2022	Patient Safety/Ethics This issue of ASCLS Today will reflect on the importance of patient safety and ethics for medical laboratory practitioners. Medical laboratory science professionals are responsible for developing a culture of safety as defined by the National Academy of Science. What technological advances have been implemented to ensure safety in all phases of laboratory testing, including pre-analytical, analytical, and post-analytical? What has been done to develop a laboratory culture that focuses on patient safety? Ethics is being added to the BOC as part of MLS recertification. How are we teaching or training laboratory staff on their role related to ethics?

While ASCLS must strive to reflect the diversity in the profession, we must also work towards an inclusive profession that aims to fully represent the society it serves. This issue of ASCLS Today will reflect on the importance—and sometimes confusing nature—of diversity, inclusivity, equity, and justice. What does it mean to be diverse, inclusive, and equitable? How do these concepts ensure a just culture in ASCLS? How can we set and achieve goals of promoting diversity?
March/April 2023	Feb. 1, 2023	Professional Visibility SARS-CoV-2 has brought unprecedented visibility to medical laboratories. However, confusion and misunderstanding (even conspiracy theories!) about testing and medical laboratories still plague our profession. Articles for this issue might showcase efforts to represent medical laboratory science to the public; successful interprofessional initiatives in your workplace; tips for promoting the profession through social media; participation at science or career fairs; or personal stories of how you discovered this amazing career.
May/June 2023	April 1, 2023	Professional Growth As the ASCLS Society year concludes with the Joint Annual Meeting, this issue will share stories from the perspective of in-person and virtual attendees of continuing education events. Additional article topics can promote the ongoing need for professional growth for medical laboratory professionals.
July/August 2023	June 1, 2023	Community As you think about community, think about your state, regional, and national meetings where our profession comes together in person or virtually. Community can be found in the workplace within the laboratory or in collaborations with the rest of the healthcare team members.
